

Review of the Oday Widgeon by Rod Johnson on January 28, 2001.

To email Rod Johnson, scroll to bottom of page

Year built:
Location of boat:	Wareham, Ma
The boat is sailed on:	Bays, sounds, or protected salt water
How the boat is used:	Day sailing
Normal wind strength:	10-15 knots
Average size of crew:	solo
Liveaboard?	No
Rod Johnson bought the boat in:	1988
If the clock could be turned back, would Rod Johnson buy again?	In a heartbeat! The Widgeon was the first "real" sailboat that I owned, and I really enjoyed the 8 years that I owned her!
Gear that's been added:	I added many items: Boom-vang, masthead fly, removeable running lights (NavLights), 3-part outhaul (O'Day called it "A Block-action outhaul), I built-in a covered stowage box between the forward seat/flotation chamber and the mast partner(seat), stern and bow cleats, a floorboard aft of the cd trunk, I also replaced/re-rigged the spinnaker gear on my boat. When I bought her she had a spinnaker, a spinnaker pole, the mast padeye for the pole, the eye for the pole lift, the spinnaker halyard, and the hooks on the side decks (just forward of the chainplates) for the spinnaker sheets. So, I added the spinnaker blocks near the stern and the camcleats amidships to rig the spinnaker sheets/guys, and made new sheets. I also added a compass. Also a tiller extension/hiking stick.
Structural or complex improvements:	Mostly just the stowage box, which did include a bulkhead just below the forward edge of the mast partner(seat), this stiffened up the boat in the area of the mast and the shroud chainplates. O'Day had originally glassed in a steel bar under the seat that had long since come loose before I bought the boat. OH, I also ended up bolting the brackets for the wooden seats up to the mast partner(seat).
The boat's best features:	It's small size, yet it is a true complete sailboat, not a sailing dinghy! With the spinnaker, and of course Main and Jib, I loved the feeling of sailing this miniature "yacht". Singlehanding was easy on the Widgeon, even to the point of setting and dousing the spinnaker. I felt that the lever-operated centerboard was a great feature, since it was very simple to use, and when I hauled the boat out in the Fall...just remove 3 screws, pull out the lever and Woomp..out dropped the board! This made cleaning and painting the cb and it's trunk much easier! Also, all the smaller O'Day sloops were designed with large mansails, small jibs, this means that they sail VERY well under just the main while learning or in heavier winds!
Problem areas in terms of design, materials, maintenance, etc.:	Well, no built in stowage was a problem, but The later models with a fordeck did have optional hatches to allow stowage under there. Other than that.....nothing.
Sailing characterisitcs:	Great sailer, mine pointed well, newer sails help! The widgeon is a very stable, safe boat when sailed as she was designed to be, this is not a rough water boat, she is a perfect boat for learning on and for relaxing sails. Use of a tiller extension to allow sitting on the side deck and keeping the mainsheet in your hand, ready to release at a moments notice are important. I quickly learned to keep the sheet in my hand (cleated in the camcleat) to be able to release it quickly. Because of that, I never capsized or came really close to capsizing.

Motoring characteristics:

Well, no more that 2hp will really fit! Smaller motors will work fine. I mounted my motor off center to port and it worked fine, but I did need to be carefull when I tacked, since the mainsheet could easily get caught on the motor. An electric might be the best, but then you have to carry a big battery.

Liveability:

Well, It was a comfortable day sailer for 1-2 people.....but more would be cozy! Obviously, overnighting would not be practical.

The owner's experience with the boat dealer or broker, if any:

private sail by previous owner

Other comments:

Mine was a 1969 model with mahogany seats.

Email Rod Johnson

The email address of Rod Johnson is not shown to ensure security. ODO does not maintain nor guarantee the validity of email addresses.

Your name:

Your email address

Required!:

Your message:

IMPORTANT! All information in this review, including the owner's boat ownership and email address, is the sole property of OdayOwners.com and available for the exclusive and non-commercial use of Oday owners. Commercial solicitation is strictly prohibited. Violators are guilty of copyright infringement and will be pursued to the fullest extent of the law.

